A Store for Visitors and Home Folks

Washington at all seasons of the year is a rendezvous for visitors from all sections of this great republic, and usually from foreign countries.

Yearly, thousands of these strangers pass through our doors and are made to feel welcome and at home in a store that is peculiarly hospitable in a dignified and reserved manner.

If they care to, they may spend a whole day in going from section to section, seeing merchandise from everywhere-for men, for women, for children, for the home—much that is different in storekeeping, enjoying the concerts of the Victrola parlors, the rest and accommodations of the reception rooms, a pleasant hour in the reading parlor of the book store, an inspection of the large cold storage vaults on the premises and the large shops devoted to the making and furnishing of better homes, located on the eighth floor. If they care to they may have luncheon and afternoon tea in the restaurant. The postoffice and parcel post bureau is convenient to send remembrances to the folks at home.

Washingtonians, many of them at least, know about these things and make free see of them as they should, though there are many just learning, and many more will.

To out-of-town patrons, and our city customers, without the city limits, we extend the services of our Mail Order Department which is thoroughly capable of carrying out any commission, and is doing it daily.
